

Deposited via The University of Sheffield.

White Rose Research Online URL for this paper:

<https://eprints.whiterose.ac.uk/id/eprint/104155/>

Version: Submitted Version

Article:

Malone, M. (2016) 4 PhD thesis-related poems from Stand. Stand, 14 (2). pp. 75-78.
ISSN: 0038-9366

Reuse

This article is distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution (CC BY) licence. This licence allows you to distribute, remix, tweak, and build upon the work, even commercially, as long as you credit the authors for the original work. More information and the full terms of the licence here:

<https://creativecommons.org/licenses/>

Takedown

If you consider content in White Rose Research Online to be in breach of UK law, please notify us by emailing eprints@whiterose.ac.uk including the URL of the record and the reason for the withdrawal request.

DEAR REVISIONIST

Thank you for your neo-concern that we grasp the full facts of this complicated matter;
for sending out, once again, the officer class to explain the subtle difference between Blackadder and the nation's history, the one being truth the other comedy;
for pointing out our parents' mistake in taking Oh What A Lovely War! to be anything but a sixties musical and not how it really was. Thank you for assuming our poetry stops at Owen; for sending out the privately-educated to explain that confusion in the ranks between your national story and literature's false history, as if, not royal families, but poetry tips men into war graves.
Saxe-Coburg, be advised, your poppy is not mine.

I'm grateful to you for letting me hear Paxman attempt the phrase wor canny bairns.
And I do appreciate your engagement with those events which legitimise the contemporary state of affairs, or, as you put it on a recent visit to a sink school, make pride cool again.
I appreciate, as you say, the need to understand the popular thinking of the day; how those words you're trying to re-claim meant something real to my grandfather right up to that morning the Liverpool Regiment came unstuck at Hermies, on the road to Cambrai.
As if history can make some long term sense of the losses and every lesson to be learned is, once more, yours.

THE TURNIP WINTER

When nostalgia is a healthy tayter, you know you're in for a hard winter.

So, the war bread squats mud-frog before us, the clay of stars grown cold on prayer refusing its miracle of change. Soon we open up our own front on farmsteads and orchards, each victory celebrated in apples, brötchen or the medal of an egg, the shrapnel of lost husbands briefly gone in a ruckus of fed children. Field-grey ghosts say grace at our table and turnip, turnip, turnip, heavy as bad news,

becomes this gall weevil grief that gnaws through the wire of our days. Swede soup for breakfast, swede chops for lunch, swede cake for dinner. Dried turnips ground for drink so ersatz we forget what it's meant to be to a life that's likewise approximate.

One day I shall steal home enough bacon in my bloomers to be again their mother.

One day, the blockade will lift and gobbets of you will go towards a counterfeit father.

NOTE: The harsh winter of 1916-1917, known in Germany as "the Turnip Winter" ("Steckrübenwinter"), was one of extreme food shortages, social unrest and civilian suffering.

MR. WILLETT'S SUMMERTIME

An Act to provide for the Time in Great Britain and Ireland being in advance of Greenwich and Dublin mean time respectively in the summer months. Date of Royal Assent: 17th May 1916.

Where do you begin with time? There's just so much to go on, with its indefinable something of a lover and what you most adore, sharing the bed but somehow always beyond your certain touch.

You rise early, saddle a horse and ride out to Petts Wood.
The morning, incandescent with summer, is running over itself to get at it and it and it and daylight is everywhere wasted upon the sleepers beyond drawn down blinds.

It's for toil and lovers you would save this, though the times beat you to it, grab the minutes for coal and zero-hours that fuel a different summer. Now we've time to die over and over before our letters reach home and afterwards doesn't always come behind before, if at all. So the barman calls 'Time!', the whistle sounds and, after synchronising our watches, we move off around the point you notice that loosening cough.

1916, and, like many a medal, your moment arrives post-mortem, the blinds still drawn in Petts Wood.