Obfuscated democracy? Chelsea Manning and the politics of knowledge curation - Supplementary Data

Supplementary Table 1: Systematic Journal Search

Table Construction

The search period for the database was from the 28th of November 2010 and until the 31st July 2018. This search produced 263 academic papers and books (including a few other items) that matched the terms; Wikileaks, Manning, US Cables, Cablegate. Papers and books that had undergone peer review were retained, and their status as either International Relations or Political Geography journals recorded.

Out of the 263 items found:

- 155 were accessible peer reviewed articles
 - From this, 15 were published in a Political Geography or International Relations journal.
- 14 papers made significant reference to the cable leaks and used leaked materials in the article.
- 34 engaged with the leaked cables but did not refer specifically to a leaked document or reproduce any part of a document or data.
- 28 engaged with the Chelsea Manning's case.

A small number of articles, and international articles, and some book chapters were not accessible to us. Book reviews, comments, and media articles are in the table but not counted.

Key to the Table

The table contains the results of a search for papers engaging with Wikileaks and more specifically the cable leaks.

Cables: indicates whether the paper makes significant mention of the US cable leaks.

Manning: indicates with the paper makes significant mention of Private Manning.

No' in either of these columns indicates no mention of either the cables or Manning, and therefore would indicate that the paper only engages with Wikileaks (and then not in any depth).

'Mentioned' would indicate that either the cables or Manning are mentioned but there is no significant engagement with the issues around either (for example, they are mentioned as part of contextual information).

'Yes' would indicate that the cables or Manning are significant to the paper's argument.

'Significant' indicates that there is more extensive engagement with either the Manning case or Cables material, often referring directly to documents or reproducing documents/data.

IR: indicates either Political Science and International Relations journals.

Geog: journal could be classified as in the Geography domain.

The papers are divided into sub-tables of different categories, some papers will appear in more than table.

Some of the papers were excluded and these are separated into table 2, the reason is noted in the final column.

Table 1a – Papers that make extensive use of the cables or extensive reference to the Manning case.
